Manley is a handsome, rugged young man, rosy cheeked, but with premature streaks of gray hair in his black locks. He is a great patron of athletic sports, and has been known to train some very successful puglilists, but withal, is popular and modest. On the other hand there are not wanting those "who do say" that when the November elections come around, when Manley seeks the seclusion that the voting booth grants, he is careful to mark a cross on the Democratic column, nor does he bother Democratic column, nor does he bothe bout the rest of the names on the ticket whether local, State or national, but "let

It go at that."

Then here is John M. Palmer, He, too, is a hotel keeper. One would not have to break the hops-tep-and-a-jump record to athletically bound from Manley's hostelry athletically bound from Manley's hostery to Palmer's, which is on the corner below Manley's, it Berry street and South Sixth. The namesake of the septuagenarian Presidential gold bug is a handsome young man, a decided blond, with a carrlage that stamps him at once as a military man. He is captain of a German cavalry company of the aristocratic Nineteenth Ward, and it is as Republican as it is martial. Then, again, there is a club of young men of the ward who have placed his name on their standards, and when the John M. Palmer Club gives an outing, trolley ride, ball or reception, the tickets are in such demand that the printer has to work overtime. All of which goes to show that there is something in a name after all, even if you do get the gold bug nomination for President or if you are a cavalryman.

is something in a name after all, even if you do get the gold bug nomination for President or if you are a cavalryman.

But, shades of Nebraska! Bryan a Republican! That's what makes the situation complicated. Bryan is the son of a Bedford avenue undertaker, and proudly wears, and conspicuously, too, a protection button in his coat lapel, and when any one calls his attention to the incongruity of wearing such a button and name together, says:

"You see that button, don't you? Well, I cast my first vote for the man it represents this Fall. See?"

Then the commentator looks at the button, at the earnest face of the speaker, at the athletic build, and, remarking, "Well, it's a long time to Election Day, and it's a free country, anyhow," walks away.

Bryan plays arst base in several crack amateur baseball teams. His favorite resort is in a store at Redford avenue and South Sixth street, and he can throw a build from there to Manley's or to Palmer's with as great ease—the ball passing McKinley's house in its flight—as though he were throwing from first to third to put out a base runner.
